Collection Summary: Collection consists primarily of extensive correspondence with colleagues and relatives. Principal familial correspondents include Nordmeyer's wife, Friedel; his parents, Ernst and Mary; his sisters; and his brothers. Correspondence with friends and lovers is also comprehensive; it documents the reaction in the 1920s to Victorian social mores. Slightly more than half of the correspondence is in German -- scanty outgoing letters are often in shorthand.

Scope and Content Note

Despite his travels and frequent changes of residence in his early life, Henry W. Nordmeyer was meticulous in saving his incoming letters. As a result, his papers contain letters from individual correspondents written over long spans of years. It is this comprehensiveness which makes this collection valuable to the researcher. On the negative side, Nordmeyer's own notes and drafts of letters were frequently written in the Stolze-Schrey shorthand system, doubtlessly with peculiar quirks, which only the most dedicated researcher will want to try to decipher.

Nordmeyer's papers are divided into three main series: correspondence, notes and papers, and miscellaneous. Correspondence falls into roughly three different categories: professional, family, and romantic or social. Professional correspondence routinely deals with professional appointments in the German departments of American universities and Modern Language Association activities, as well as requests for comments or citations on German literary questions. Since Nordmeyer was active during years difficult for German-Americans, letters not infrequently touch on issues such as American attitudes towards Germans following World War I and the American absorption of scholars fleeing Nazi Germany. Principal professional correspondents include Friedrich Bruns, Edward Prokosch, Charles A. Williams, Otto Heller, Alexander R. Hohlfeld, and Otto E. Lessing.

Henry and Friedel Nordmeyer maintained regular contact with their relatives in Europe, and were generous in supporting their needy family members. The half-British Henry Nordmeyer supported his widowed aunt, Mrs. Isabella Ogilvy-Ramsay, for many years. He kept up a steady correspondence with his parents Ernst and Mary, his sisters Gertrud Koehler and Paula Nordmeyer, and brothers Albert and Willie. Their letters reflect the dire economic conditions they faced in 1923 and in the postwar period, as well as the bright prospects they thought they had when the Nazis first came to power. Friedel's relatives in Soviet-occupied Germany, including her mother Johanne Braun, her aunt Nanny Burghardt, sister Lilo Ruhe, and niece Elisabeth Strecker, depended on the Nordmeyer's support to carry them through the 1950s. Finally, the letters of Henry's nephew George Nordmeyer, a German scholar at Yale, cross the lines of both professional and family categories.

Nordmeyer seems to have made friends and lovers easily. His correspondence with Jack and Evelyn Orelup, Bettina Jackson, Erich Brockelmann, Elizabeth Spanknebel, Charlotte Rudolph, and others demonstrates the reaction of the 1920s to Victorian social mores.

Although the correspondence is remarkably comprehensive, certain gaps do exist. Letters written in 1921 and 1922 are missing, and those from the 1930s appear to be underrepresented. Any letters which Henry and Friedel Nordmeyer exchanged prior to their marriage in 1932 apparently were removed from the collection.

Outgoing letters are rare. When they do exist, they are drafts, often in shorthand, or they are carbon copies. Although sparse in number, they are often informative. Outgoing letters are interfiled with incoming letters by correspondent.

Scope and Content (cont.'d)

Other material in the collection consists largely of research notes and drafts written in shorthand; lecture notes; and a substantial paper, "Reinmar der Alte und Heinrich von Rugge," all written while a student at the University of Leipzig. Further material which may be found includes a miscellany of poems, articles, and notes written by Nordmeyer and others.

Slightly more than half of the correspondence is in German, with the remainder in English. Nearly all the German handwriting done before 1920 is in the Gothic cursive script, but as time progressed, more correspondents adopted Italic cursive. Nordmeyer's own handwriting, however, was in Italic cursive. He was fluent in English at an early age.
