RESEARCH IN PROGRESS

My research addresses physical, mental and behavioral health issues at both the micro- and macro-levels using community psychology, positive psychology and cross-cultural perspectives. I am also interested in the development, implementation, and evaluation of community-based programs and empowerment interventions.

For nearly 30 years, I have worked on a variety of topics, including women's economic and psychological empowerment; domestic violence; welfare reform; child support enforcement; social services for the elderly; college students' stress, coping, and resiliency; university-community collaboration/engagement; youth mentoring; hope of mentors and health-care professionals, and weight and eating-related issues.

Most recently, I have three main research foci:

- 1) Positive psychology interventions (e.g., gratitude interventions).
- 2) Posttraumatic stress disorder and posttraumatic growth.
- 3) Media (e.g., social media) and stress.

I continue to work on an award winning mentoring program (the Star Mentee Program), which I developed and began implementing in 2002. The Star Mentee Program (an externship in psychology opportunity, which is also a service learning course) involves having undergraduate students from various majors (not just psychology), work with children that need academic mentoring and tutoring at an elementary school here in Toledo.

SERVICE

I have engaged and continue to engage in a wide array of professional, community, university, college, and department service activities.

For details, see: <http://homepages.utoledo.edu/mtiamiy/>

GRANT ACTIVITIES

Since 1994, I have applied for and/or received a wide range of funding for my research and community development activities.
