

Contents

	PUBLISHER'S NOTE	v
	FOREWORD BY HUGH SETON-WATSON	vii
	INTRODUCTION	xxix
1	A Few Timely Questions Regarding the Application of Marxism-Leninism	3
2	The Peaceful Coexistence of the Two Systems	11
3	The Five Basic Principles of International Relations and the Question of Our Foreign Policy	20
4	Ethics and Morals in Hungarian Public Life	43
5	Significance of the June, 1953, Party Resolution and Its Effect on Our Party	66
6	Role and Significance of the March and April Party Resolutions	75
7	Characteristic Features and Specific Traits of the New Course	80
8	The Objective Economic Law of Socialist Development	87
9	Socialist Expanded Secondary Production	97
10	Productivity of Labor and Reduction of Production Cost	113
11	Problems of Socialist Industrialization	122
12	The Socialist Reorganization of Agriculture	138
13	The Question of Independent Peasant Farms	161

14	Production, Standard of Living, and Economic Planning	176
15	The Question of National Indebtedness to Foreign Countries	184
16	The Role and Significance of the NEP	194
17	The Problems of the Worker-Peasant Federation and People's Front	204
18	State Discipline, Legality, and Collection of Agricultural Produce	214
19	Culture, Literature, and Art	223
20	Nationalism and Proletarian Internationalism	233
21	National Defense and Pacifism	245
22	The Question of the Relationship of Party and State	249
23	The Evaluation of the Party's Role and Achievements	254
24	The Opposition: Its Methods, Forms, and Effects	269
25	Adherence to the Rules of Party Life and the Question of Rehabilitation	278
	EPILOGUE BY GEORGE PALOCZI-HORVATH	298