The AHEC program is a community-based, clinical education network that supports UT’s College of Medicine curriculum in rural and underserved areas of northwest Ohio. Organized through three regional AHECs - Bryan AHEC, Lima AHEC and Sandusky AHEC - community-based, clinical education is provided in 20 counties to the west, east and south of UT’s Health Science Campus. Using the physician preceptor model, more than 260 volunteer faculty members teach required and elective clinical courses within private practices, 28 affiliated community and critical access hospitals, community health centers and clinics. Through the ‘one teacher, one student’ model, third and fourth year students have the opportunity to gain practical patient experience in a community, health care environment.
