K-12 Outreach: Developed the Interactive Model of Leaf Decomposition, IMOLD, <http://imold.utoledo.edu/>

The goal of this project is to explain leaf decomposition and how it relates to the Earth's C cycle and climate to high school and college students. This website contains a series of animated lessons about decomposition, an interactive model that lets you predict how different types of leaves will decompose in different climates, and classroom activities about decomposition for teachers.

Susan Steiner, a science teacher from Murphy High School in Murphy, North Carolina collaborated on IMOLD's design while working with me in 2012 through the National Science Foundation's PolarTREC program.

Professional Development:

- Participated in a week-long Course Design Institute at the University of Toledo in July, 2015 to learn how to better design pedagogically sound classes
- In May 2011 I received NASA GLOBE Program training on teaching the C Carbon to K-12 audiences. I am now a certified GLOBE C Cycle trainer, and I am using the pedagogical methods learned through GLOBE in teaching and outreach.
