Historical Sketch

The Ohio Academy of Science, founded in 1891, is a not for profit, volunteer driven, membership based organization. To present, it contains 2,000 members all whose goals are to stimulate interest in science, encourage interaction and collaboration in education, science, engineering, technology, or their applications. These are only a few of the academy's objectives. This organization hopes to widen public understanding and appreciation of science to help create an informed society. The Ohio Academy of Science does this by publishing an annual journal called "The Ohio Journal of Science". Along with these journals, there are annual meetings that take place all over Ohio. These scientists, engineers, industrial researchers, science and math teachers and students are all dedicated to promoting the study of science. The information and Library Science Division of the OAS was formed to study the impact of information sciences on society. The division sponsors annual meetings in conjunction with the OAS, and members present papers on all aspects of library and information science.

Scope and Content Note

This collection is arranged alphabetically and contains information on the Ohio Academy of Science ranging from 1973-1993 collected by Ronald Watterson, former librarian of the Medical College of Ohio. Included are council meetings, abstracts of presentations, membership lists and volumes of "The Ohio Journal of Science" consisting of meeting agendas. Also, information on a newer subdivision called the Information and Library Sciences Division is present. This group is a part of and works with the OAS on aspects concerning library information studies.
