

BIOS OF SPEAKERS

Climate Change and the Great Lakes

Great Lakes Water Conference, November 5, 2021

Kim Channell, climatologist, Great Lakes Integrated Sciences and Assessments (GLISA), University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan. B.S.E., University of Michigan; M.Eng., University of Michigan. Her work focuses on communicating climate information to stakeholders in the Great Lakes region.

Kenneth Kilbert, professor and director of the Legal Institute of the Great Lakes, University of Toledo College of Law, Toledo, Ohio. B.A., Bethany College; J.D., University of Pittsburgh. Courses taught by Professor Kilbert include Environmental Law and Natural Resources Law. His scholarship focuses primarily on environmental law issues.

Cinnamon Carlarne, professor, Ohio State University Moritz College of Law, Columbus, Ohio. B.A., Baylor University; J.D., University of California – Berkeley; M.S., University of Oxford; B.C.L., University of Oxford. Courses taught by Professor Carlarne include Environmental Law and International Environmental Law. She has authored numerous books and articles regarding climate change.

James Clift, deputy director, Michigan Department of Environment, Great Lakes and Energy (EGLE), Lansing, Michigan. B.A., Central Michigan University; J.D. Wayne State University. Clift has decades of experience with environmental policy, and his many roles at EGLE include oversight of the office of the Great Lakes and the office of Climate & Energy.

Katrina Kuh, professor, Pace University Haub School of Law, White Plains, New York. B.A., Yale University; J.D., Yale University. Courses taught by Professor Kuh include Environmental Survey, Climate Change Law and Torts. Her scholarship focuses primarily on environmental law and includes many publications regarding climate change.

Martin Olszynski, professor, University of Calgary Faculty of Law, Calgary, Alberta. B.S., University of Saskatchewan; LL.B., University of Saskatchewan; LL.M., University of California – Berkeley. Courses taught by Professor Olszynski include Administrative Law and Water Law. His scholarship focuses primarily on Canadian environmental, natural resources and water law and policy.