Biographical / Historical

Graduate Studies at the Medical College of Ohio were first undertaken when members of the faculty received joint appointments in the departments of Biology at the Bowling Green State University and the University of Toledo (UToledo), as well as in the Department of Exercise Physiology at the University of Toledo. Also, a number of UToledo students did their dissertation research with MCO mentors. The graduate program and a Graduate Studies Committee, with clinical departments, was appointed in 1970. The Graduate School first held its classes in September 1975 and in June 1979. The second graduate program approved by the Ohio Board of Regents (OBOR) was the Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) in 1980. Students were admitted to the MSN program that same year in the fall and the first nine graduated with the degree in June 1982. Then in 1985, the OBR granted final approval for the Master of Science in Industrial Hygiene degree program with the name of the program changed to a Master of Science and Occupational health in 1991. This continued with a 15-year period of rapid development of new graduate programs, which was driven primarily by the national trend to move many of the health profession programs from the undergraduate programs to the master's level programs.

Over the years, the institution has awarded 1,442 master's degrees, 335 Ph.D. degrees, and 124 graduate certificates. The Medical College of Ohio merged with the University of Toledo on July 1, 2006 and continues to have multiple degree options for graduate students. After the merger, the college became known as the Office of Graduate Medical Education and includes both Residency and Fellowship programs with multiple masters and Ph.D. degree programs like Neurology, Forensic Pathology, and Radiology.
