Biographical Sketch

Josina Jones Lott believed that every child, regardless of physical or mental limitations, had ability and could learn. Lott Day School began in her apartment in September of 1938. Mrs. Lott had seen children turned away from the public school because parents were told that there was no place for them in the classroom. She was determined to educate every child in the basics of "...the alphabet, reading and simple arithmetic." Her school started with one student and quickly grew to fifteen as word of her work spread within the community. The pastor of nearby Rosewood Presbyterian Church invited her to use the Sunday school rooms in the basement of the building to accommodate the increasing enrollment. After five years, the school grew to fifty-five pupils and had outgrown the church basement.

Mrs. Lott gained the support of a small group of influential people who became the first Board of Directors of Lott Day School in 1945. The school was legally incorporated in 1946 and rented a former school building located at Heffner and Kelsey Streets. At some point after moving into the new building, Mrs. Lott asked the school auxiliary for $170 to start a sheltered workshop for students who had reached their limit of academic achievement but were unable to work and help support themselves. This was one of the first vocational programs in the United States aimed at training young adults in skills that would allow them to work and earn a living thus becoming more independent members of society. It was decided to use the school auditorium as the sheltered workshop room. The workshop continued to grow and eventually a separate facility was built to accommodate the growing number of trainees. It was at that time the only workshop of its kind built by tax money specifically for the developmentally disabled adult.

In 1951, the Ohio State Legislature recognized the fact that there were no programs in our public schools for the trainable developmentally disabled child. Legislation was passed allowing training classes for these children and placed the administration of such community classes on the local level with the Child Welfare Boards. In 1957, a tax levy was passed in Lucas County that included support for Lott Day School and in 1958 the Lucas County Child Welfare Board took over the financial control of Lott Day School. The school was renamed Heffner School but Josina Jones Lott remained principal of the school and the sheltered workshop.

When Lott Day School merged with the Lucas County Child Welfare, services for developmentally disabled children expanded through the building of Larc Lane School and the opening Tracy School in a former Toledo Public School building. A growing awareness of the need for such specialized services resulted in the passage of a countywide tax levy in 1959 that would provide education and training to developmentally disabled children in Lucas County. With new funding came the building of the Larc Lane School, the use of other buildings in the county and developing diversity in the services that were provided, e.g. Summer camp and a residential camp. Federal grant money was obtained that also help expand services to residents of Lucas County.

What Josina Jones Lott began in 1938 has grown into a multi-organizational approach to helping mentally and physically challenged individuals. Northwest Ohio now has many organizations such as the Lucas County Association for Retarded Citizens, the Lucas County Board for Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, Lott Industries and the Northwest Ohio Developmental Center.

Josina Jones Lott Collection, 1949-2000

Scope and Content Note

The records of Josina Jones Lott, the Lott Day School and the Lott Sheltered Workshop date from the 1949 to 2000. The collection is arranged in five series.

Series 1, Administrative Records, includes materials documenting the Lott Day School and associated organizations, including the Lott Auxiliary, Lott Guild, and Lott Sheltered Workshop. Also included are materials documenting the county's efforts to assist the developmentally disabled, including the Lucas County Board for Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, Association for Retarded Children, Lucas County Association for Retarded Children, Child Welfare Board, Northwest Ohio Development Center, Decem Center, the Public Awareness Plus Committee, the Human Sexuality Advisory Committee, and Lott Industries. The materials consist of annual reports, committee reports, correspondence, meeting minutes, fundraising activities, educational program materials, and manual of rules and regulations. Of particular note is the Wolfensberger Report, an in-depth assessment done in 1973 of the "Lucas County Program for Mentally Retarded" by Dr. Wolf Wolfensberger of the National Institute on Mental Retardation. The files are arranged in alphabetical order by subject.

Series 2, Biographical and Historical Materials, includes biographical material on Josina Jones Lott and the Lott Day School, historical information on Franklin County Board of Mental Retardation, Lucas County Board of Mental Retardation, and a brief history of mental institutions in Ohio. Also included is information on Doren A. Gustavis, superintendent of one of the first institutions in Ohio to treat developmentally disabled youth.

Series 3, Printed Materials, includes a limited index for newspaper articles from 1958-1963 (primarily from the Toledo Blade) about developmental disabilities as well as pamphlets, magazine articles, press releases, newsletters, Motive Magazine from 1961-1971, and copies of newspaper articles from 1950-1987 that deal with developmental disabilities on a local and state level.

Series 4, Audiovisual Materials, includes an extensive collection of photographs and slides, most of which are undated. The photographs are arranged in alphabetical order by subject, and are individually listed in the file folder listing. Included are photos of daily activities by clients, administrators, and teachers. Special functions such as Christmas parties and fundraisers are also documented, as is participation in the Special Olympics. Celebrities, politicians, and other notable individuals involved in developmental disability causes are included. The slides are arranged in general categories by subject. Video tapes of commercials advertising Lott Industries to potential contractors are included, as is a compact disc documenting a 1998 conference in Minnesota on developmental disabilities which includes a brief history of services provided to people with such disabilities.

Series 5, Ephemera, consists of two scrapbooks dated 1949-1985 containing newspaper clippings documenting services to the developmentally disabled, a guestbook from the dedication of Jay J. Shuer School, and three tax levy campaign buttons. The scrapbook dated 1949-1971 includes a memorial to Josina Lott and programs from special functions honoring Mrs. Lott.
