Biographical Sketch

Hugh Gregory Gallagher was born October 18, 1932, in Palo Alto, California, the son of Hubert and Luthera Wakefield Gallagher. Gallagher's father was a professor of public administration and a government consultant, and as a result Gallagher grew up in several different places, including Chicago, New York, Washington, Colorado, Greece, and Great Britain.

In 1952 Gallagher was stricken with polio at the age of 19, while attending Haverford College in Pennsylvania. He spent six weeks in an iron lung and nearly died. For more than a year he underwent treatment for the disease as he struggled to recover from it, but it left him paralyzed from the chest down.

In the spring of 1953 Gallagher was accepted at the Warm Springs Foundation in Warm Springs, Georgia, where he spent eight months in rehabilitation. Warm Springs was founded in the 1920s by Franklin D. Roosevelt, along with other polio survivors. It was here that he learned the basics of living independently as a disabled person—getting in and out of the wheelchair, bathtub, car, etc., and also began to accept his condition on a psychological level. It was also here that he became interested in Franklin D. Roosevelt and how he led such a successful life as a disabled victim of polio.

Once he had completed his therapy, Gallagher desired to return to college. After being denied acceptance at many schools around the country, he was admitted to Claremont McKenna College in Claremont, California, and graduated in 1956 with a B.A. degree. Having always wanted to study at Oxford in the United Kingdom, Gallagher applied for a Rhodes Scholarship. His application was returned unprocessed, however. The founder of the scholarship, Cecil Rhodes, had stipulated that the scholarship be awarded only to men “fit in mind and body,” and the board of the Rhodes Trust used this language to avoid dealing with the problems associated with Gallagher's disabilities. Not to be deterred, he instead applied for and was awarded a Marshall Fellowship. He studied at Oxford from 1956-59, and earned both B.A. and M.A. degrees with honors.

In the fall of 1959 Gallagher joined Senator John Carroll's (D-Colorado) staff, and in 1962, became Administrative Assistant to Senator E.L. Bob Bartlett (D-Alaska). His early experiences working in the Senate influenced him to write his first book, Advise and Obstruct: the Senate and Foreign Policy, which was about the Senate's relationship with the president and how foreign policy affects it. The book was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize. At this time he also worked on gaining equal rights for native Alaskans, and met Inupiat civil rights leader Charlie Edwardsen. Gallagher later wrote a biography of Mr. Edwardsen, whose Inupiat name was Etok. The book, ETOK: A Story of Eskimo Power, was published in 1970.

Next, aided by Senator Bartlett's power in Congress, Gallagher began working on gaining equal rights for people with disabilities. He wrote the Architectural Barriers Act of 1968, which required that all buildings and other facilities built, remodeled, or leased with Federal funds be accessible to the disabled. It was also the first legislation that treated the rights of the disabled as civil rights, and is often considered the predecessor to the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990. Because of Gallagher, the first ramps were installed at the Library of Congress and the National Gallery of Art, architects were forced to include facilities for the disabled in renovation plans for the Kennedy Center, and accessibility at hospitals, airports, and other public buildings was improved. These are among the reasons that Gallagher has been called “the father of the disability rights movement.”

Senator Bartlett died in 1967, and a short time later Gallagher began working as chief lobbyist and director of the Washington office of British Petroleum, and was responsible for obtaining permission for the construction of the Trans Alaska Pipeline. He later owned a consulting firm for European and Australian CEO’s doing policy analysis.

In the early 1970s, Gallagher began to suffer from clinical depression. Unable to continue working, he quit his job and began therapy. He continued in psychoanalysis for several years. Gallagher reflects on this dark time in his life in his 1998, Black Bird Fly Away, an autobiographical work.

In 1982 Gallagher was awarded a fellowship to the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. Curious about Franklin D. Roosevelt’s psychological experience as a polio paraplegic, he used this opportunity to begin researching the subject at the Library of Congress. The result was Gallagher’s book, FDR’s Splendid Deception, published in 1985, which revealed how Roosevelt hid his disability from the public. The book won several prestigious awards, including the United Nations Writers Society distinguished biography medal. It was followed in 1990 by another book entitled By Trust Betrayed: Patients, Physicians and the License to Kill in the Third Reich, which dealt with euthanasia of the disabled in Nazi Germany.

In 1995 Gallagher won the $50,000 Henry B. Betts Award for his lifetime of work for the disabled. He was instrumental in seeing that the FDR Memorial in Washington, DC, dedicated in 1997, depicted the former president as he really lived—in a wheelchair. He was a co-founder of AUTONOMY, INC., and was on the board of Compassion in Dying, both organizations interested in end-of-life issues. His final book, Nothing to Fear: FDR in Photographs, was published in 2001. Gallagher died July 13, 2004.

Scope and Content Note

These papers were donated to the Canaday Center by Mr. Gallagher in May 2004. They include correspondence; Senate files; book, article, and speech files; research files; biographical and personal files; family papers; photographs and photographic materials; artifacts; and printed material.

The correspondence is scattered through the years from 1942 to 2001, and includes personal and professional material. There are a few well-known personalities represented in this series.

The Senate files contain material that Gallagher used in his work as a Senate aid, primarily material that he, personally, researched and wrote. This series covers the years 1959-69 and 1976.

The book, article, and speech files contain manuscript, typescript and printed copies of many of Mr. Gallagher's writings, both published and unpublished. This series represents his work scattered through the years from 1948-1999, and also includes reviews of some of Gallagher's books, as well as reviews he wrote of others.

The research files cover a wide variety of subjects and are composed of notes and other miscellaneous material gathered during the course of Mr. of Mr. Gallagher's research.

The biographical and personal files contain various items such as articles and clippings, awards, career information, souvenirs, etc. It also contains blueprints for Mr. Gallagher's house in Cabin John, Maryland, and articles written about the house. This series covers the years from 1937-2002.

The family papers contain a variety of material collected and saved by the Gallagher family through the years. It includes material such as correspondence, writings, passports, pamphlets and brochures, souvenirs and keepsakes, etc. This series covers the years from 1919-1985.

The series on photographs and photographic materials includes photographs, scrapbooks, VHS videotapes, and postcards, and spans the years from 1880 to 2002. The photographs includes family photos as well as some used in Gallagher's book, Nothing to Fear: FDR in Photos. The scrapbooks are from Hubert and Luthera Wakefield Gallagher's youth, and contain many old family photographs and mementos. The VHS videotapes include Gallagher's taped interviews, speeches, and raw footage from the PBS documentary about Gallagher's life entitled "Coming to Terms." This series also contains a small collection of postcards, slides, and one stereo transparency.

The artifacts in this series are miscellaneous items collected by Gallagher and his family throughout the years, and includes material such as historical newspapers, doll clothes, Japanese Yen, and commemorative items.

The printed material consists only of a copy of Lorenzo Milam's book, Crip Zen: A Manual for Survival, and scattered issues of The Fessenden Review.
